heads of the Finnish lawyers at present :-- A man died a week or two ago in Pielisjarvi, in the Chinese Imperial Loan of 1884 B-5 per cent interior of the country, who was said to have led a bad and ungodly life. He had always been known to be well off, but nobody knew how he had gained his possessions. There were many Chinese Imperial Loan, 1886 E-11 per cent. strange stories affoat, but one which was more credited than all the rest was to the effect that Huclarinen, as was his name, had, in his early days, been on an intimate footing with " Wihtahausu" (the "evil one"), with whom he had had several transactions of a commercial character. When Hucksrinen's will was opened it was found that he had bequeathed all his landed property and possessions to the Devil. The family naturally protest against the will, and the question now arises how this ticklish matter is to be settled. Everybody seems anxious not to offend any of the parties concerned. There can be no doubt that the Devil is thus a landowner, by legal right, in Finland.

Not a little scandal has been occasioned both in the Old World and the New by the dispensation for marriage within the prohibited degrees which the Pope has granted Princes Letitia Bonaparte and the Duke d'Aosta, Amadeus, ex-King of Spain. The Duke is the uncle of the Princess, and the marriage of uncles and nieces is regarded as a marriage forbidden by divine and human law. The Popo, however, has a dispensing power, and the uncle will marry the niece in September, with the blessing of the Church. To do the good Pope justice, he is said to have made a manful stand against the proposal that Amadeo should marry his sister's daughter, but precedents were adduced in support of the dispensation. A Queen of Spain had been allowed to marry her uncle, and their son, Prince of Brazil, was allowed to marry his aunt. Therefore the Duke d'Aosta got his dispensation, and the mole and the niece in a Maney few weeks will be bridegroom and bride. This theiphong kind of licence seems to be the special privilege of Menlis Royalty-one of those privileges which even the most envious demagogue would not care to share.

Some curious statistics, lately published with the anthority of the French Académie des Sciences, indicate a source of fallacy with respect to centenarians, to which Mr. Timbs used to Wiestock ... 29.56 attach much importance. In the very old, vanity is apt to exaggerate the age, just as in earlier life it often acts as a disturbing influence in the opposite way; hence the statements of soi-disant centenerians must be received with caution. It is said that in Bayaris, in 1871, out of 37 persons who claimed to be a hundred years old, only one (a woman) was found, on official investigation to have really reached that age. In Canada, of 82 supposed centenarions, only 9 successfully underwent the ordesl of a similar criticism. Au inquiry of the same kind has just been made in France, with the result that, of 184 persons registered as centenarians in the last census, 101 have been found to have no claim to that honour. Of the remaining 83 (52 of whom were women and 31 men), the age was certified in 67 solely by the statements of relatives; in only sixteen was any dooumentary evidence forthcoming. Most of these contensrious belonged to the south-western part of France, especially the foot of the Pyreness.

The inhabitants of Sicily seem to be in rather a benighted condition. Consul Stigand, in his trade report on that island, just issued, gives some remarkable information on this point. Sicily last year suffered from an invasion of cholers, the effects of which were heightened through the ignorance and superstitious character of the population generally. Even in Palermo, in the poorer quarters, it was believed as in the Middle Ages, that the Government and the richer classes were disseminators of the cholera poison, intending to exterminate the poorer population. Sisters of charity were ston-ed in their visits to the houses of the choleraic nationts, and even doctors were sometimes obliged to go to the houses of the sick under militray escort; and in the moorer quarters a man with a decent cost on his back always walked in danger of being assaulted, since it was believed, that all were agents for the extirpation of the poor. In the interior of Sicily, in some of the adapted to the Sight. chief towns, most tragic scenes ensued. The popular mind in Sicily seems inaccessible to any dea of clean water and seap. The public promenades of the interior are infested with disgusting odours; and even in Palermo it is only the main streets which are kept swept and garnished in a civilized fashion. Consul Stigand doubts whether cholers may not now be an endemic in Sicily, only to be rected out by the adoption of decent sanitary babits in public and private life.

Paris Figure, "of a valuable remedy for nervous adapted to my sight. Some such Indian summer of delight ap forgetfulness of trouble, and the tragic con ditions of our days, was now opening to Harold Quaritch and Idadela Molle. Every day or almost every day they met and went upon their painting expeditions and argued the point of the validity or otherwise of the impressionist doctrings of art. Not that of all this painting came any. thing very wonderful, although in the evening the Colonel in the silence of his shamber would take out his canvasses and contemplate their rigid proportions with singular pride and satisfaction. It was a little weakness of his to think that he could paint, and one of which he was somewhat tenacious. He was like many another, s man who could do a number of things oxseedingly well and one thing very badly, and yet had more faith in that one bad thing than in all the good. And still, strange to say, although he affected hold Ida's in such cheap regard, it was a little painting of the latter's that was most dear him, and which was most often put upon his essal for purposes of solitary admiration. It was one of those very impressionist productions that faded away in the distance and full of soft grey tints, such as his goal loathed, and had a tres with a blot of brown colour on it, and altogether (though as matter of fact a clever thing enough) from his point view of art utterly "anathema." This little picture in oils faintly shadowed out himself sitting at his easel, working in the soft gray of the autumn evening, and Ida bad painted it and given it to him, and that was why he admired it so much. For to speak the truth our friend the Colonel was going fast-sinking out of sight of his former self into the depths of the love that to believe so firmly in his own style of art and possessed his soul. He was a very simple-minded and a pure man Strange as it may appear, since that first unhappy business of his youth, of which he had never been heard to speak, no living woman had been any. thing to him. Therefore, instead of becoming further vulgarised and hardened by association with all the odds and ends of womankind that a man travelling about the globe comes in contact with, generally not greatly to his improvement his faith had had time to grow up stronger even than before, and he once more looked upon woman wife that he was going to London on business

Apparently they were not very pleasant ones He walked round the room, which was reeking of patchouli or some such compound, well mixed with the odour of stale cigar smoke, looking absently at the gee-gaw ornaments. On the mantelpiece were some photographs, and among them, to his disgust, he saw one of himself. With something as near an oath as he ever indulged in, he seized it, and setting fire to it over the gas, waited till the flames began to soorch his fingers, and then flung it, still flaming, down into the grate.

Then he looked at himself in the glass over the mantelpiece—the room was full of mirrors—and laughed bitterly at the incongruity of his gentlemanlike, respectable, and even refined appearance, in that vulgar, gandy, vicious-looking room:

Suddenly he bethought him of the letter in his wife's handwriting, which he had stolen from the pocket of Edward. Comey's cost. He drew out, and throwing the tea yown and the interminable glove off the sofs, mt down and commenced to read it. It was, as he had expected, a love letter, a wildly passionate love letter, breathing language which in places almost touched the beauty of poetry, vows of undying affection that were throughout redeemed from vulgarity and eyen from silliness by their utter at its highest has always a beauty of its own.

He read it through and then carefully folded it and restored it to his pocket. "The woman that in the end the boldest player will win." He rose from the sofa—the atmosphere of the place stifled him, and going to the window he threw it open and stepped out on to the balcony. It was a lovely moonlight night, though chilly and for London the street was a quiet one.

Taking a chair he sat down there upon the beloony and began to think. His heart was softened by misery and his mind fell into a tender means, and the woman rose up in his path again, its kind.
